

Tanana Conservation Outreach, 2004

Abstract: This project is a continuation project of Tanana Conservation Outreach, which has been ongoing since 2001. The project is directed at providing a forum bringing fisheries scientists, elders, and young people together to share information and increase understanding of how better fisheries information can improve management. The focus of the effort was on students grades 4 through 12; and by the end of the project very few students had not participated in this project. The project fostered greater communication and understanding between the community and fisheries scientists, and people became much more interested in and committed to management. This report details outreach and capacity building efforts for 2004. As well, we provide recommendations for additional work.

Citation: Peters-Zuray, K. 2005. Tanana Conservation Outreach, 2004. U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Office of Subsistence Management, Fisheries Resource Monitoring Program, Final Report (Study No. 04-256). Tanana Tribal Council, Tanana, Alaska.